

Department of Sociology, Rutgers University—New Brunswick
Associate or Full Professor, Sociology of Health and Illness

The Department of Sociology at Rutgers University seeks to hire a nationally or internationally recognized senior scholar in the sociology of health and illness, to begin Fall 2018. Candidates should have an outstanding and sustained record of research, teaching and mentorship, and leadership in the profession. Research and teaching interests could include (but are not limited to) health inequalities, global health, mental health, aging/life course, disability, comparative health systems, healthcare access and professions, and health policy. The successful candidate will contribute to undergraduate and graduate teaching on the sociology of health and healthcare, as well as build bridges with colleagues across the university who are interested in the social dynamics of health, medicine, and healthcare. Demonstrated ability to secure external funding is highly desirable. Theoretical and methodological orientations are open. We will begin reviewing applications on September 30, 2017. Applications received after that date cannot be assured full consideration. Please upload a cover letter, curriculum vitae, and 1-2 writing samples to interfolio.sas.rutgers.edu. Three letters of recommendation are required as well, to be sent directly to interfolio.sas.rutgers.edu. Questions regarding the search may be directed to soc-chair@sociology.rutgers.edu. Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, is an Equal Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer. Qualified applicants will be considered for employment without regard to race, creed, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, national origin, disability status, genetic information, protected veteran status, military service or any other category protected by law. As an institution, we value diversity of background and opinion, and prohibit discrimination or harassment on the basis of any legally protected class in the areas of hiring, recruitment, promotion, transfer, demotion, training, compensation, pay, fringe benefits, layoff, termination or any other terms and conditions of employment.

Department of Sociology, Rutgers University—New Brunswick
Assistant Professor, Sociology of Health and Illness

The Department of Sociology at Rutgers University seeks to hire a tenure track assistant professor, to begin Fall 2018, who specializes in the sociology of health and illness. Specific research and teaching interests could include (but are not limited to) health inequalities, global health, mental health, aging/life course, disability, comparative health systems, healthcare access and professions, and health policy. The successful candidate will contribute to undergraduate and graduate teaching on the sociology of health and healthcare, and help to forge ties with colleagues across the university interested in the social dynamics of health and medicine. Theoretical and methodological orientations are open. We will begin reviewing applications on September 30, 2017. Applications received after that date cannot be assured full consideration. Please upload a cover letter, curriculum vitae, and 1-2 writing samples to interfolio.sas.rutgers.edu. Three letters of recommendation are required as well, to be sent directly to interfolio.sas.rutgers.edu. Questions regarding the search may be directed to soc-chair@sociology.rutgers.edu. Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, is an Equal Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer. Qualified applicants will be considered for employment without regard to race, creed, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, national origin, disability status, genetic information, protected veteran status, military service or any other category protected by law. As an institution, we value diversity of background and opinion, and prohibit discrimination or harassment on the basis of any legally protected class in the areas of hiring, recruitment, promotion, transfer, demotion, training, compensation, pay, fringe benefits, layoff, termination or any other terms and conditions of employment.

Department of Sociology, Rutgers University—New Brunswick
Assistant Professor, Socioeconomic and/or Racial Inequalities

The Department of Sociology at Rutgers University seeks to hire a tenure track assistant professor, beginning Fall 2018, who specializes in the study of socioeconomic and/or racial and ethnic inequalities. We prefer but do not require a research focus on the United States. Specific research and teaching interests concerning inequalities could include (but are not limited to) the study of social movements, public policy, political sociology, and class and/or racial identities. Theoretical and methodological orientations are open. We will begin reviewing applications on September 30, 2017. Applications received after that date cannot be assured full consideration. Please upload a cover letter, curriculum vitae, and 1-2 writing samples to interfolio.sas.rutgers.edu. Three letters of recommendation are required as well, to be sent directly to interfolio.sas.rutgers.edu. Questions regarding the search may be directed to soc-chair@sociology.rutgers.edu. The Sociology Department is strongly committed to increasing the diversity of our faculty and welcomes applications from underrepresented populations. Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, is an Equal Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer. Qualified applicants will be considered for employment without regard to race, creed, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, national origin, disability status, genetic information, protected veteran status, military service or any other category protected by law. As an institution, we value diversity of background and opinion, and prohibit discrimination or harassment on the basis of any legally protected class in the areas of hiring, recruitment, promotion, transfer, demotion, training, compensation, pay, fringe benefits, layoff, termination or any other terms and conditions of employment.